Dear colleagues in all fields of medicine!

How can we, as teachers, teach Anthroposophic Medicine in an appropriate way? This question lies at the heart of the interprofessional three-year course „Teach the Teacher in Teaching Anthroposophic Medicine“.

The teaching and general methodological tools communicated in this course are applied in practice and can thus be experienced directly. Participants and lecturers form a joint learning and teaching organism. Working in small interprofessional English and/or German-speaking groups, each participant is actively involved in shaping the process. There is consecutive interpretation of lectures and plenary events.

The course started with 65 participants from 20 countries and 12 therapeutic professional groups in September 2014 and continued in 2015.

This third course unit builds on modules I and II but is also open to new entrants. This year we are focusing on the methodological question how we, as physicians, nurses and therapists, can grasp and activate the will to heal effectively both in the patient and in ourselves in the form of intuitive cognition. The goal is for course participants to train their skills and to practice teaching methods so that they can teach this level of the therapeutic relationship.

Here once again an – interdisciplinary – patient presentation forms the starting point.

The central motif and instrument in this course is warmth which, as a creative, cosmic force, can unfold its action in all forms of therapy and healing substances through the channel of our encounter with the patient. In this sense we will familiarise ourselves with warmth as lying at the heart of medical training. Questions of professional team building, collaboration in diagnosis and therapy, teaching techniques as well as consolidation of what has been jointly learnt run alongside the whole of the course.

Everyone who wants to learn to teach Anthroposophic Medicine in training and further training courses in ever better ways is warmly invited!

We send warm greetings and look forward to seeing you!
