GOETHEANUM
ASSOCIATION

Thomas Rau is a German architect who has spent most of his professional career in the Netherlands from where he acts globally via his enterprise THOMAS RAU (<https://anewdawn.rau.eu/> and <https://thomasrau.eu/en/>). He has received worldwide acclaim through his up-to-date approach to organic architecture. Among other prominent buildings, he is for example currently constructing the Dutch Pavilion at the Osaka World Fair 2025.

Thomas Rau became a global game changer when he developed, together with Sabine Oberhuber, a radical approach to sustainability in architecture and the (re-)usage of any kinds of materials. This work is manifested in a book (<https://thomasrau.eu/de/material-matters/>) and based in the business <https://turntoo.com/en/>. A great number of international organizations and big players in business have already adopted or are in the process of implementing the revolutionary approach to using the limited resources of Earth.

The <https://www.worldgoetheanum.org/> is a network of partners, consisting of companies, institutions, initiatives and self-employed people. It is committed to the future of man and earth on the basis of human dignity and accountability. Its actions are based on the vision of a just world. The partner network sees itself as part of a movement that seeks, promotes and implements a new, comprehensive view of the human being.
